2. Reason for the revision of the full-year earnings forecasts

Consolidated net sales have been revised upward by 3,000 million yen from the previous forecast, reflecting a review of the latest sales plan for business partners.

For non-consolidated results, operating income and ordinary income are projected to exceed the previous forecasts, mainly due to improvements in the marginal profit ratio and other factors.

In addition, non-consolidated net income has been revised upward, reflecting a reassessment of the estimated valuation of investments in subsidiaries based on recent performance trends of overseas subsidiaries.

With respect to consolidated profit items, support for group companies related to the production transfer project in the U.S. has progressed, and negotiations to pass on the customs duties to customers have also advanced.

As a result, the profitability of the U.S. segment for the full fiscal year is expected to improve. Accordingly, consolidated operating income, ordinary income, and profit attributable to owners of the parent have all been revised upward from the previous forecasts.

With regard to the future outlook, several uncertain factors remain, including potential changes in U.S. government customs policies, further materialization of geopolitical risks, and fluctuations in exchange rates. The Company will continue to disclose earnings forecasts in a timely and appropriate manner, reflecting the latest developments.
