Effective date	December 22, 2026	-	December 25, 2025
Source of dividends	Retained earnings	-	Retained earnings

2. Reason

The Company's basic policy on profit distribution is to pay stable and continuous dividends based on a sound balance sheet, following a comprehensive consideration of consolidated performance, DOE (Dividend On Equity), cash flow, and capital efficiency. In addition, the Company holds cash and deposits, etc. for growth investment and as a reserve against unforeseen circumstances.

The Company had not set any year-end dividend forecast for FY2026 due to difficulty in calculating an appropriate and reasonable performance forecast. Following the completion of efforts to strengthen its management foundation and the resulting change in its cost structure, the Company has now reviewed the level of cash and deposits, etc. held as a reserve against unforeseen circumstances, and has decided to allocate the resulting financial capacity to enhancing shareholder returns.

Based on the above, the Company has decided to set the per-share year-end dividend payout at 25.00 yen, an increase of 5 yen from the previous fiscal year.

The Company will continue to strive to further enhance shareholder returns in line with the growth of its business.
