2. Reasons for the revision

Nisshinbo Group's net sales are expected to fall slightly below the previous forecast. Sales in the Wireless and Communications business—including solutions, specialty equipment, and Marine Systems business—are performing well, and sales in the Micro Devices business are showing signs of recovery in line with the gradual recovery of the analog semiconductor market; however, sales in the molded products business within the Precision Instruments business are expected to decline as announced by Notice Regarding the Absorption-Type Split and Other Matters Related to the Transfer of the Molded Products Business by Nisshinbo Mechatronics Inc. on June 30, 2026.

Operating profit and ordinary profit are expected to exceed the previous forecast, driven not only by increased profits resulting from higher sales in the Wireless and Communications business but also by improved profitability stemming from structural reforms based on the "Roadmap for Transformation," as well as the Micro Devices business returning to profitability.

Please note that operating profit in this revised forecast is expected to decrease compared to the operating profit for the first three quarters of the fiscal year, as we anticipate an increase in one-time expenses in the fourth quarter due to a change in the bonus accrual period resulting from revisions to the Japan Radio Group's personnel system, as well as increased expenses associated with the transformation of our business portfolio.

Profit attributable to owners of the parent company are expected to exceed the previous forecast, primarily due to an increase in ordinary profit and the anticipation of extraordinary income resulting from the sale of the molded products business.

The exchange rate assumptions for the fourth quarter of the consolidated fiscal year are 150 yen to the U.S. dollar and 175 yen to the euro.
